EASY MAGIC

By EDNA KENT FORBES

THERE are so many little tricks to be learned in the way of fixing one's self up, that any woman can learn the easy magic of making herself attractive even if it is impossible for her to be really beautiful.

One of the best things to do first is to examine yourself critically and impartially and decide which are your good points and which are your bad ones, and what can be done to improve matters. I think that the two most important things are—the way you do your hair and the manner in which you dress.

The style in which the hair is dressed, changes not only the shape of the face but often its entire expression. The model in the picture who has planned her hair back does not look particularly pretty, and yet she is one of the prettiest of girls when she dresses her hair in a soft and flirty manner.

Therefore, the first bit of advice is—if you are not entirely satisfied with the style you wear, try various new styles of hair dressing until you have hit upon something more becoming. Then look over your clothes. Often the whole difference between a becoming and an unbecoming dress is a matter of making a single or two changes. Your clothes must give you good lines.

Colors next in importance is the question of color. Certain colors will make you prettier—certain shades will make you more youthful and many colors will bring out all your good points. You must experiment here also to find out what shades you can best wear.

I do not suppose I need mention such things as the details of your complexion, the shape of your nose, your eyes, or any of the other little accessories which might make or mar the appearance. All these little details act like magic in changing one's appearance.

A M. D.—A girl who has protruding ears can improve her appearance by dressing the hair so as to cover the ears. If they protrude very much there is a simple little operation which may be performed to make the ears lie flat. If they do not protrude much, they may be hidden by the hair.
